Tom Copeland and NAFCC are collaborating to make a larger impact with family child care providers, the quality of professionalism, and the quality of care for children across the nation. Their mission is to improve the business skills of family child care providers by working together to offer a series of new business education resources and technical assistance.

Tom Copeland is the nation's leading trainer, author, and advocate on business issues for family child care providers. He is a licensed attorney and a consultant to the National Association for Family Child Care, a non-profit organization. He has helped thousands of providers, trainers, and tax preparers understand complex business and tax issues since 1981. Tom has authored many business guidance books.

Headquarter in Salt Lake City, Utah since 2001 and incorporated in 1982, The National Association of Family Child Care (NAFCC) serves as a nationwide non-profit organization committed to supporting and strengthening the family childcare profession and advocating for family child care providers, children and families. Diversity in leadership and a growing membership of more than 400 state and local family child care providers and affiliate associations across the United States and in several foreign countries, help define and implement quality family childcare standards through accreditation and educational training. In 1988, NAFCC developed the only nationally recognized Accreditation Program designed specifically for the family childcare field and its diverse family childcare environments. NAFCC continues to improve program standards, provide a national voice for members, and network to reach regulated and non-regulated providers promoting quality family child care.
